

Torpor paper graphs

Anusha Shankar, Rebecca Schroeder

Wednesday, December 09, 2015

These are results of a cross-continent study of torpor in hummingbirds. Data were collected from a total of eight individuals across five sites, with three species in Arizona, USA, and five species in the Andes of Ecuador.

```
Warning: package 'gridExtra' was built under R version 3.1.2
```

```
Loading required package: grid
```

```
Warning: package 'wq' was built under R version 3.1.3
```

```
Loading required package: zoo
```

```
Warning: package 'zoo' was built under R version 3.1.3
```

```
##
```

```
Attaching package: 'zoo'
```

```
##
```

```
The following objects are masked from 'package:base':
```

```
##
```

```
as.Date, as.Date.numeric
```

Nighttime energy expenditure plots

 Nighttime energy expenditure compared to hours spent torpid

Average hourly energy expenditure plots

Minimum hourly energy expenditure plots

Comparing average and minimum energy expenditure

Species- or site-specific plots with regression lines

Statistical tests